

Radio Juxtapoz, ep 150: Anthony Cudahy and the Fragments of Self

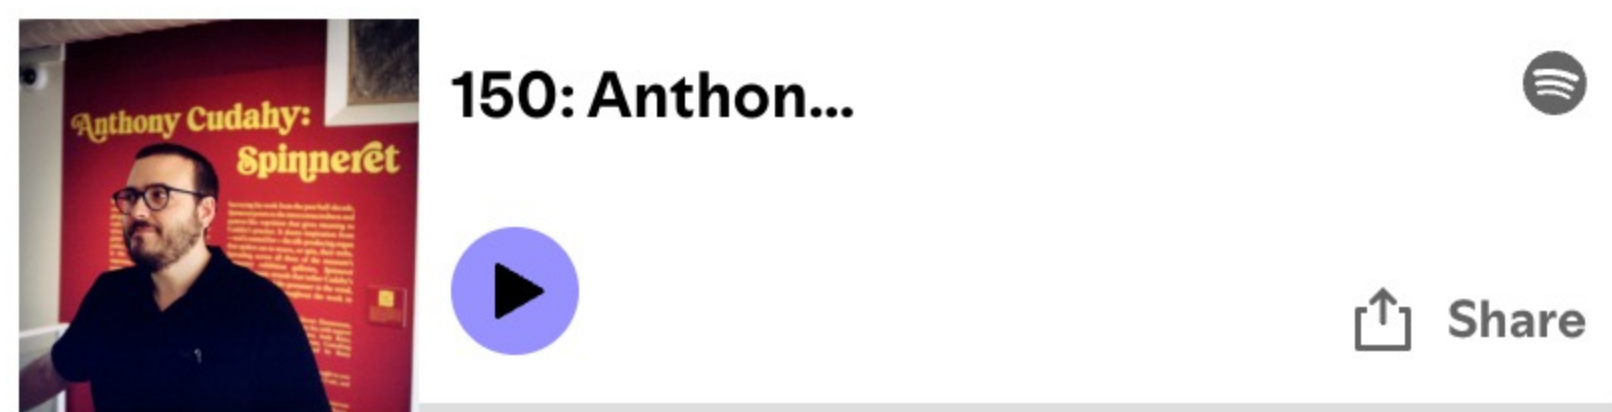

October 09, 2024 | in Magazine

Post

Portrait courtesy of Anthony Cudahy

Anthony Cudahy is at an interest time in his life when we spoke for the Radio Juxtapoz podcast: he hadn't been in the studio for a bit. And who could blame him? He had concurrent solo shows open at Grimm and Hales in NYC, and his first museum show, Spinneret, had opened Ogunquit Museum of American Art in Maine earlier in the year and was about to open at the Green Family Art Foundation in Dallas the week of our conversation. A break, or at least taking it all in, seemed quite relatable.

And on this episode of Radio Juxtapoz, it does feel like Anthony is thinking about what is next, giving his most recent work and past works a little deeper look, deeper thoughts and really taking note of how the past 5 years of his life have really taking off. He is a painter of stories, of narratives, capturing his husband and friends in fragments that almost take on a life of their own. Maybe that is what it is all about; letting a painting take you somewhere, outside of yourself by of yourself, and just taking you to another place. That is what Anthony is really, really good at that.

Subscribe to the Radio Juxtapoz podcast.

The Radio Juxtapoz podcast is hosted by FIFTH WALL TV's Doug Gillen and Juxtapoz editor, Evan Pricco. Episode 150 was recorded in the NYC in October 2024. Follow us on @radiojuxtapoz

WE THINK YOU'LL LOVE

Painting

Karen Seapker is "Stirring"

Plato is excited to present Karen Seapker's first solo exhibition with the gallery, Stirring. Based on Seapker's observation of the garden outside her studio and her reflections on the current hist...

February 20, 2025

Installation

You Won't Always Feel This Way: Chris RWK @ Harman Projects, NYC

Harman Projects is pleased to announce You Won't Always Feel This Way, the latest solo exhibition by NYC-based artist Chris RWK. Following up on the artist's 2023 solo exhibition with Harman Projec...

February 20, 2025

